After all, do we know what communication is?Communication is one of the most important necessities of every human being.Besides exchanging the information, we exchange our feelings, emotions. Thereare different methods of communication and the most common one is directspeech between humans. Other facilities can also make communicationpossible. In modern times the primary types of communications equipmentinclude television, telephone and the computer. Television: Television sets andtelevision programming opened the way for a new way of communication forfuture generations. People could have access to news from around the world,pretty much as is happened. Internet: Internet use became more prevalent atthe beginning of the XXI century. E-mail began to develop and it became easy tosearch for information. Often, we know the latest news before it appears onbroadcast television or can be included in hard print newspapers. Mobilephones: As this technology developed, our personal communication habitschanged with the ability to communicate at will with very few limitations. Themost popular means of communication nowadays is the mobile phone.Advanced models of mobile phones enable users to access the internet, sendand receive e-mail and text messages, watch TV, listen to music, take photos,and phone.	flashcards
